

Sexual Overload:

The effects of graphic sex education on innocent minds

by Roy Masters

*Let us explore what happens to the innocent
mind...*

When it came to learning about sex as a boy, the best thing that ever happened to me is what didn't happen. I didn't learn about sex until the age of 15 when I went to work in my uncle's diamond factory. I remember listening with some fascination to my fellow employees' tales of conquest and asking myself, if I had a young daughter, would I let guys do things like that to her? Having decided clearly that I would not, I looked upon my own impulses and knew that I could not do to other men's daughters what my nature would lead me to do. What those young men saw as fun and pleasure, I saw as terribly degrading to women. Because I was old enough and mature enough to look beyond my newly awakened feelings, I retained my innocence which protected me like an impenetrable bubble.

It was like constantly being chaperoned by my conscience.

I was lucky. Not having been pushed/seduced into sexual awakening at a too tender age, I was able, like many of my generation, to wait for the right time and place to express that side of my nature, and to avoid a great deal of heartache, disease and tragedy in the process. Today's children are not so lucky. They are literally bombarded with sex from every direction – TV, film, music, peer pressure. But perhaps the worst violators of all are the sex education classes taught in schools – the very institutions we depend on to prepare our children for the future.

Let us explore what happens to the innocent mind of a young boy or girl when confronted with explicit sexual material.

First, let's acknowledge an important point: We are all born with a basic, indwelling standard of decency – a knowledge of right and wrong, a conscience – which by its very nature has the power to hold sway over unruly passions. But it is equally true that a child can all too quickly be separated/seduced from that standard through intimidation or shock – the kind of shock a child experiences when exposed to graphic sexual material.

shocked by sexually explicit information, he finds his mind endlessly fixated to increasingly vivid sexual images.

That is why the kind of guidance children receive is so important. It can either confirm the promptings of their conscience and set them firmly on the right track, or it can contradict the child's conscience and instead become the source of corruption itself. That is exactly what has happened in the nation's classrooms.

Once the child has been separated from his inner standard by being sexually awakened prematurely, he becomes hopelessly dependent on the seducer for the guidance he can no longer find from within. Under the banner of education, teachers have become seducers – corrupters of innocence who usher young people into forbidden sexual experiences that lead to teen pregnancy, abortion, sexual diseases, and mental and emotional problems.

Consider the effect of a Playboy centrefold on a young boy; or the effect on a female child of seeing her dad's nakedness; or the shock a young child experiences while hearing his parents groaning in the next room – even a three year old senses the meaning of the sounds without completely understanding them.

A child drawn too early into that adult world of sensuality is faced with two 'choices': unhealthy expression of his overpowering impulses, or unhealthy repression. Gone is the hope of incubating a natural discipline to be exercised at an older age. A ten year old who has been shocked by sexually explicit information, finds his mind endlessly fixated to increasingly vivid sexual images, to the point where these images compel expression. One can quickly see the problems this presents to a child: A young boy may develop a desire to molest his younger sister in order to experiment safely on someone weaker than himself who doesn't have the consciousness to shame him about what he's doing, and can't get him into trouble. If he does gratify his ego through sexual activity, he feels greater conflict and emptiness, and, strangely enough, ever stronger waves of uncontrollable sexual desires, accompanied by frustration, dissatisfaction, and rage.

When a child's sexual nature is awakened too soon, he is simply not able to put the sensuous giant back to sleep, and so lives in a terrible nightmare. Only people who have gone through it and have overcome their problems can really understand the debilitating, paralysing fixation to sexual fantasy that possesses so many young minds – to the exclusion of work and study. Indeed, children can become so preoccupied with sex that they can no longer function in school – no wonder Johnny can't read.

tears down a child's modesty
- his protective barrier against obscene/intrusive

Once a child is sexually awakened, he gravitates toward society's "sexperts" who eagerly assure him that every new impulse is perfectly normal. It's all approved under the umbrella of self expression.

A child is extremely vulnerable to these ideas – especially when presented by adults in positions of authority – as he has not yet developed the ability to shield himself from dangerous influences.

Consider the nightmares young people sometimes have after watching a horror film. A child cannot make an objective appraisal of what he is seeing; the images of terror gain entrance to his mind and excite his imagination, and only parental comfort and assurance can dispel their frightening power. But unlike the horror film images that fade quickly in the light of day, graphic sexual images continue to hold the child's mind captive as he is helplessly assaulted by them in the classroom, time after time.

Today's sex education classes are actually a form of child abuse, which systematically tears down a child's modesty – his protective barrier against obscene/intrusive influences. When this barrier collapses and a person is seduced into his imagination, right choices are no longer available. It is like falling into an Alice in Wonderland world of feeling in which every door leads farther away from reality. Emotional/sexual arousal blocks the youngster's mind from making rational choices that could lead to truly human relationships, rather than blind animal attachments. How can a child remain unscarred when exposed to demonstrations of nudity, genital anatomy and graphic descriptions of the mating process? All this sexual overload violates the soul and creates a terrible conflict in the young child's mind.

Young boys are not told they must be gentlemen with young ladies. Instead, they are given explicit sexual instruction but they have no easy way to undo the damage to their psyches.

The biological facts of sex are readily observable and do not require years of study – the animal kingdom supplies abundant opportunities to observe the basics. It is not the knowledge, but the responsibility that goes with the knowledge that makes a person more than an animal. Knowledge is acquired from the outside, but the wisdom to deal with that knowledge comes from within. Sexual knowledge without responsibility can destroy a child's character, his personality, his feelings about the opposite sex and his entire view of life. Regardless of the positive image family planning groups have created, the unadorned truth is that these organisations seduce young people into premature sexual activity, and then exploit that failure by providing a means to fulfill their victims' growing addiction to excuses, contraceptives and abortions. The clinics that bring their messages into the schools may not consciously be cultivating a market for their products, but that is precisely what they are doing – at the price of a child's innocence. They reduce others to an animal level – something easily accomplished when a child is sexually indoctrinated at a young age – and appeal to their base nature, first by awakening the sensuous desire, and then by nurturing it – while gaining power for themselves.

The saddest part of all this may be that a child's natural trust in authority, represented by teachers, is completely betrayed. Instead of truly educating a child – a process by which a child's natural curiosity about life is nurtured so that he may unfold from within – today's sex educators have become corrupters who, with smiles on their faces, drag their victims into a world of sexual license, moral relativity, and perversion. This is first degree murder of the soul. If only we understood the importance of protecting our children from those who would rip the veil of modesty from them. Children need to know that love is more than sex, people are more than animals, and relations between people must be governed by moral laws. What differentiates man from animals is conscience, from which emanates a common sense code of decency and self control. Obeying this deep impulse leads to self reliance, moral fortitude and character – the fertile soil in which individual selfhood and true freedom can flower.

Reverse the process, override the inner law, and say goodbye to civilization.●

Editor's note: This article was used as briefing material in Parliament during our last Conservative majority government, when the House of Lords voted for the right of parents to withdraw their children from sex education classes, to include those introduced as HIV education. The House of Commons also approved the legislation and this fundamental right under law has subsequently withstood a number of insidious attempts to abolish it.

Motivation by Roy Masters

When your attitude changes, you repent of your dishonesty and wrong people withdraw their support. Speaking up to them is a 'trauma' to one's ego. Your heart palpitates, you become weak at the knees (although the other person only sees an upfront strength) and they don't like you anymore. So they take away their support for your illusion and image of yourself. You are dying to the old way!

If your heart is inclined correctly, you shall have the natural motivation to follow through to accomplish anything. A vain nature, on the other hand, will find the need for external support and excitement irresistible. You cannot divorce motive from its source. In our egotism we are (born) cut off from reality. Then we find ideas and a way of life arising through our mind that we tend to believe originates within us, the kind that need emotional support either by encouragement or challenge. So when you find yourself procrastinating or having to push yourself, it is because you are not motivated by love. Not even a good deed can be truly good if it takes reward or any kind of pressure or excitement to move you to do it.

If your heart is inclined correctly, you shall have the natural motivation

From now on, whenever you feel this lethargy and ache, instead of lighting that cigarette, pouring a drink, raiding the refrigerator, or indulging in any one of a number of distractions, remember that this is a good time to meditate.

Surely you have learned your lesson concerning pride's answer to pressure. Your adversary wants to throw you off balance to force you to make a judgment of some kind prematurely. If you do, you are bound to make an error in that judgment and make a fool of yourself as before. Or you may become so afraid of making a wrong decision that you will go along with a decision embracing evil to ease the pressure that requires that decision (which you can't make). Or you may throw the responsibility of decision making on to others. One way or the other, you deliver your life into other people's hands. Decision making (in the Light) is your responsibility, and if you don't exercise this responsibility in the proper way, you will die in guilt and bitterness. Stay calm, and you will be shown what you should say or do.

Whenever you feel this pressure to make a decision on any matter at all and you don't see what to do, don't get flustered. Do nothing.

Don't be embarrassed or angry with yourself because you don't know what to do. Don't race your mind for answers. Sometimes, when you don't know

Motivation

*You see the soul
that has come to the Light to learn
its lesson, knows

what to do, you are not meant to do anything! The main thing is to stay calm and if there is something that should be done, you will come to know it. Chances are that the moment will pass and you will be glad you didn't do anything at all! Decisions of any kind bring good or evil into the world. So don't let yourself be trapped into perpetrating evil. Without "your" decision, evil cannot further its purpose!

Don't be fooled into letting the "enemy" stir you or appeal to your "fine sense of fair play", or you will always be playing into his hands. When he sees that you are not tempted or confused or feel obliged to decide, it becomes obvious that you are very aware. This frightens him because he knows that you know what he is up to, and so you win the day. If you can recognize the truth of this, it will be just as true "under fire" as it is now. Hold sway over your body and mind with the understanding of this principle (which is faith), and you will have obeyed the Spirit within and become stronger to resist greater trials to come.

To meditate properly, it is essential that you find the proper attitude, which will then be blessed with the appropriate objective state of consciousness and motivation. If you use meditation like you do other distractions, you get involved with the technique itself, hypnotized, in other words. A wrong attitude toward the words in the meditation will get you involved hypnotically so that you will "act like a Christian and still live like a heathen" – then, seeing the conflict, you may blame the meditation, become fearful as if it were evil and perhaps find yourself defensive and unable to "get with it".

From the blessed state of consciousness (right attitude), the mind becomes objective and is filled with a light and a mystical power to deal with all observed errors as they unpeel. Be careful not to be angry or frightened over what you see. A reaction of fear or anger is (usually, but not always) the evidence that, (1) you are resenting the Light and (2) your ego is being tempted to roll up its sleeves to deal with what you see (as if it could!).

Pride is at work again. The same is true for what goes on outside you as well as inside you. If you knew you were going to fail in a business venture, you wouldn't even get started. So, if you are really seeing by the Light, you should also know how hopeless it is for you to egotistically change what you see, but here is where error is changed for you. When you fully realize you can't change yourself, you throw the full responsibility for change and decision upon the Light that shows you this. Then the miracle occurs and faith begins to grow.

You see the soul that has come to the Light to learn its lesson, knows this truth more and more deeply; it is not angry, humiliated, frightened or challenged to change or rearrange things. No longer defiant, proud and willful, the soul is instead grateful and will have changed – and this change of soul allows a meaningful change to take place in the body (through it). It is all so simple.

Don't be too ambitious to progress or you will stumble again. Less and less study is the rule of thumb if you are on the right track. Most books will lose their appeal and seem dry and meaningless. If you are on the wrong track, you will find yourself hungrier and hungrier for books and scriptures. What study does is to create the illusion of progress but at the same time, under cover of illusion, "advanced learning" cheats you of discovering the same thing for yourself. You will forget how to discover and depend more on books and teachers.

Learning, then, will have the effect of making you drunk, learning to forget what learning does, just as drinking helps one forget what drinking does.●

The Poison in the Word of Authority by Roy Masters

The more you fail (tricked by your own mind), the more your tricky imagination appeals to you and draws you into its intrigues. You lose yourself in intellectual knowing and in doing so, you reject reality. Colourful thoughts and imaginings draw you like a magnet into the dream world, where you can escape. The reality that would expose your guilt. When you lose yourself in exciting colourful dreams, you fail to see the drab meaninglessness of the existence you have so pridefully created for yourself. By its very nature, pride cannot and will not see its own folly, but must escape into thought stuff.

The search for greatness through knowledge is the very thing that makes us insecure to begin with – and it is the very thing we trust in order to "feel" secure! Our trust reinforces the ancient belief in knowledge; seducers become our teachers and our authorities, the creators of our "reality". They keep us alive in our sleep of death by dreaming up "new" knowledge, "new" techniques to reassure our faltering egos.

We feel most secure when we identify with the authorities who embody the knowledge we have come to need. Our authorities reinforce the original lie that knowledge is what we need to be secure, to "get ahead" in life; and so, without knowing what we are doing, we hand over our lives and souls to authorities, those who are in reality more confused than we are ourselves.

Something wonderfully terrifying happens to the mind of a person who dreams of becoming a leader of men. He starts to go mad, thinking he is discovering reality. Common sense deserts him, and a strange confusing cleverness wells up in its place. He becomes an authority by giving up his soul to the demon of knowledge and allowing himself to become corrupted and confused. The common sense he was born with has been stripped away and replaced by formal education. He is now ready to pull rank, to confound, confuse, and dehumanize other fools; to feel a sense of power and importance rising in his vampirish heart.

Education, as we know it, murders the soul – it dehumanizes, confuses and confounds.

Hear me well. The secret of salvation lies not in education, but in realisation. Without understanding to modify their influence over us, words become hypnotic. We spend our entire existence being programmed and resisting programming, and struggling against the effect words have on us, not only on a psychological level but on a physiological level as well.

Words have a way of triggering profound physical changes in us as we accept them and endow them with something of the reality they are intended to represent. Crime, violence, mental illness, war and disease – even poverty – have their roots in the way we believe; and the way we believe leads directly to the way we behave.

Language can be treacherous and dangerous beyond belief. It is the purpose of this written word to alert you to the pitfalls of mere rhetoric.

and salvation is to

Take the matter of faith. Religion is supposed to set us on the path toward God. Let us take, in particular, faith in a noble religion like Christianity (which can indeed do what it claims) and see how perverted its teachings can become when understanding of the Bible is intellectualized.

The first deadly sin of the spoken word is that which bids us to study and concentrate on "holy writing" in order to acquire understanding and the salvation of the Lord. But was not the quest for knowledge the very sin that led to our fall? If we heed the poison in this advice and give credence to the spoken or written word, instead of trying to understand the reality it seeks to awaken us to, we simply duplicate the original sin.

In order for the skilled word-monger to control your mind, he must first seduce you away from the counter-influence of your own understanding. There are many tricks he can use to lead you into a state of doubt and confusion, the main one being to induce you to reach for a promise of glory and power equal to the godhead, a state in which you can do no wrong.

In order to hang onto the belief in your 'godliness' you must be made to doubt the reality that says it isn't so. That reality, once doubted, becomes almost impossible for you to believe again. You see it as the lie, in place of the lie that made you doubt it. You can no longer believe or accept it; you even see it as a threat. You become a victim soul, whose only belief system is the relationship between you and the words of your seducer.

Through your relationship with deceit you undergo emotional, mental, physical, animal changes. Through this connection, also come the suggestions that lead your changeling-being to calamity. If you are lucky (blessed), you may wake up one day and see that you have been betrayed. You see all those 'wonderful' dreams, goals and nice people for what they are.

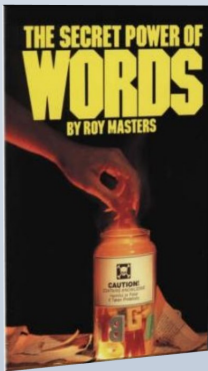

It doesn't matter whether your ambition is "socially acceptable" or downright illegal and immoral; the lie blinds you equally well either way. The end result in either case is betrayal, disappointment, disillusionment, guilt, rage, depression, unhappiness and frustration. But if deceit can be used to make us set aside reality – and encourage our pursuit of the forbidden – it can be used again to 'save' us from guilt.

Perhaps it is time now to turn to religion and salvation from sin: and here is where we are in danger of falling to the guile of the serpent again. Remember that the original problem was doubt, a doubt engendered by our separation from understanding through the leading of words. When the serpent speaks to your soul, he uses words in a very special way, to deceive, to get you caught up with those words instead of with 'the enemy' – understanding. He wants you to concentrate too hard, to memorize scripture or learning of whatever kind, to block your understanding and to make you the victim of an institutional power structure, which has its roots in hell. Remember, the only way to freedom and salvation is to have faith in the understanding in your heart.

The first thing a deceiver does is to acquire gobs of religious knowledge and a degree or two. Of course, he may not see himself as a deceiver; he has simply "bought" the lie that will poison all his actions from here on. He knows that our faith and very existence are locked into the knowledge of this world and that our ego inherently looks up to authority. For the most part, the more knowledgeable a person is, the more wicked he is, having traded deep understanding for the 'respect' that is bestowed on much learning.

Word of Authority

The wicked have a great natural influence on the less wicked. Wickedness is the authority of this world and the wicked person's nature is nurtured by his mindless fixation to knowledge. Thus, knowledge translates into power for the authority figure.

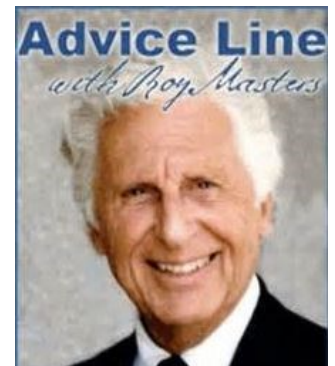

Knowledge develops in us a wicked, lying nature that is recognized as authority by other budding egos. Wherever you look, in the political scene or the underworld, you will see big sinners dominating shaping and leading the little sinners.●

Writing in re: Radio Reception

Before British Summer Time started this spring, I was delighted to hear Roy's show loud-and-clear on my car radio in southeast England, with surprisingly little interference. This was between 6pm and 7pm on 846kHz AM at Folkestone's Leas Cliff promenade, right by the town's newly-constructed First World War memorial.

Yes, the seaside town of Folkestone, practically the furthest point in England from Radio North's Irish transmitter, whose target reception area is Northern Ireland and the west of Scotland!

Listening to Adviceline's drive time slot after sunset, when AM reception is at its best – and when I was also just able to get an audible signal next to Folkestone's central rail station (like Radio Caroline's in her last days at sea)!

Meanwhile, I know of other places in southeast England where there is no Radio North reception after dark (or daytime) and I understand there's a similar situation in central England around Northampton, where 846AM is heard at night-time in some areas and not others.

It would be interesting to hear about Roy's signal-strength on car radios in the big northern cities, especially near the Irish Sea coast – eg, Manchester.* It would also be interesting to find out about other areas of the British Isles where there is decent (or halfway decent) Radio North reception on AM.

If you fancy trying 846AM on your car radio 6pm–7pm (weekdays), after the clocks go back an hour in October, why not email New Insights with any successful reports?

Your Letters

Watch out, the perfect storm is on its way in the west!

As these are interesting times we live in, I thought I would write down a few thoughts for posterity and who knows, maybe also sound a word of warning to anyone who is still half asleep out there.

Most of us living in the west are brought up to live our lives collecting as much “Stuff” as we can, even though our Creator warns us ‘Thou Shall not Covet’. We may even get into debt because of this propensity to acquire “Stuff” or just spend, ie, approximate total US debt is $127 trillion. What does it take for us to heed the message?

Perhaps there is no better way than to separate us from our “Stuff” when we have to run for our lives and can't take all our “Stuff” with us! Also, having to drag it around with you in the wilderness for 40 years, as in the Exodus, maybe a cure may help us focus on what is truly important.

In the Bible, it mentions a place (or world power) called Babylon that encapsulates all the faults and sins of mankind, which will eventually be annihilated in a mighty judgement by the Creator like the world before the flood in the time of Noah and as in the demise of Sodom & Gomorrah.

With the recent US Supreme Court decision in favour of same-sex marriage and America’s staggering abortion death count since 1973 is soon to reach 60 million, along with a completely Marxist White House administration, you are made to wonder about the survival of this once-great country with her refined English heritage... created to be a beacon of light to the world, as has been the case with Israel in the history of mankind. [Here, we can at least be thankful that there is one part of the United Kingdom, Northern Ireland, which has kept out both same-sex marriage and abortion – and that we don't have a “completely Marxist” British government! Ed.]

When Adolf Hitler decided it would be a great idea to make the Jewish people the scapegoats for all the faults and problems in the world, some could see the holocaust coming and got out of mainland Europe. Others did not, maybe because they were too attached to their stuff. The same could be said now for the United States and the European Union (hopefully we British will vote to leave the EU in our forthcoming referendum)! The Weimar Republic in 1930's Germany, incidentally, had a National Debt of 910% GDP.

After World War II, it came to pass that the state of Israel was reborn, as per Biblical prophecy. It has since become a haven for the Jewish people and a blossoming nation, in what was described by a travelling Mark Twain as “desolate country” only 80 years before Israel’s rebirth.

However, trying to undermine and divide the land of Israel is never a good idea, as you are dealing with the promises made by the Creator of the Universe to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob-Israel. Not only is the Marxist US administration obsessed with this undermining, it is also hell-bent on pushing an “Iran Deal” that is a grave threat to Israel. If the three branches of US government approve this deal, America will undoubtedly pay a terrible price.

From my perusing of the internet, I've also been aware of the growing inevitability of a global financial collapse centering on America and the west. It has been reported that the IMF wants to introduce a new world reserve currency on 20th October 2015 to replace the US Dollar and there are fewer & fewer global buyers of US government-debt bond certificates.

Where has all the money gone? Have all the trillions of government overspending actually been to finance (or partly to finance) the building of underground bunkers or even cities for the 'Elite' to survive an above-surface catastrophe, such as a nuclear attack or multiple meteor strike with cataclysmic tsunamis and great earthquakes... or just been to finance the huge debt of a covetous nation.

How about an EMP (electromagnetic pulse) attack or solar storm thrown in for good measure? Whether it is terrorists using an EMP weapon or an enormous electromagnetic flare from the sun, it would have the same disastrous effect on the US National Grid, sending the country back to the 1800's.

Another concern is the LHC of CERN (yes I love acronyms), the ultimate scientific experiment... the Large Hadron Collider at the European Council of Nuclear Research. As you may have heard, the mad scientists of this world appear to have congregated on the border of Switzerland/France to conduct experiments into the creation of the Universe.

Their ultimate experiment is timed for 23rd September 2015. The reason for the experiment is to re-create the “Big Bang” by attempting to collide particles in the LHC above the speed of light and anyone's guess is what the outcome could be. Possibly, colossal destruction!

CERN's hope is that they might discover dark matter and even other

"dimensions" but even one of their own award-winning atheists, Stephen Hawking, warns that further "God particle" experimentation could provoke an out-of-this-world catastrophe. Creating dark matter or black holes with an opening to other realms is probably a doorway we are meant to keep shut!

Reports from insiders at the CERN establishment have made it clear that dark forces are attached to any dark matter created and this may have unintended consequences by releasing these forces on planet earth. If this is man trying to play the role of Creator of the Universe, it can certainly be considered an ill-judged experiment if not plain evil.

You also have to ask yourself, why is there a statue of the Hindu Goddess of Destruction outside the CERN offices.

Anyway, if you're still around by 2016 and haven't gone to meet your Maker yet, there maybe something else to watch out for. The New World Order (otherwise known as the 'Elite' or Illuminati) hope to benefit from any calamity or opportunity on earth to advance their agenda for a One World Government or One World Religion.

The good news though is our Saviour Yahshua Ha Mashiach (Jesus Christ in both Hebrew and Aramaic) is coming back to rule the world. Maybe all we will have to rely on in these coming times of trouble is our faith in our Creator Yahweh (Hebrew and Aramaic) to give us the strength to see us through it all... and if you are still wondering, perhaps you might consider that 23rd September 2015 is the Day of Atonement in Yahweh's Biblical calendar.

Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man. (Luke 21:36)
